WORTH WORKING FOR. Fort Worth's Chance to Secure the State

Alliance, Cotton and Produce Richange. The secretary of the State Fortners Alliance, whose headquarters is in this city, is in receipt of a letter from Mr. C. W. Macune, State Alliance agent, also president of the National Alliance, in which he speaks of the establishment of a grand central cotton and produce exchange in some one of the leading Texas cities in time to handle the present year's crops. The purpose is in part to control and offer for sale the entire cotton crop of the state produced by the Alliance. The exchange will receive offers, get quotations from all the markets of the world, learn by wire where the various Alliances are bulking their cotton, get advances for producers on what they store in their own yards, and in short manage the disposition of the crop on systematic business principles.

But the office of the exchange will not relate to cotton exclusively, but includes wheat, corn, oats, hay and all other products offered for sale by Texas farmers. The leading idea is to sell direct to the eastern purchaser, and dispense with the middle man. By combining and self-ag in immense quantities the Alliance hopes to eliminate the "stem winders" and deal only with principals. In doing this they expect to obtain better prices for their products, whereas they have heretofore had only the poor privilege of accepting whatever was offered.

President Macune writes: "This plan is destined to revolutionize the whole system of selling our products, and if we can establish a reputation for honesty and good faith, will redound greatly to our benefit." He says, further, that wherever the exchange is located that place will be and that the Alliance proposes to the call cities that desire to secure the exchange.
